a security incident.

About the series

The Maritime Security ISPS & MTSA Training Series is a collection of 11 videos or DVDs that helps vessel operators, ports and facilities managers address the evolving needs of the maritime industry in the implementation of maritime security management systems. It provides a way to train their maritime employees in the mandatory instruction required by the International Maritime Organization and the U.S. Coast Guard. This comprehensive training package, presented in lecture format and illustrated with video footage of vessels and port operations, was created by some of the world's leading experts in ship and port security, with input from international law enforcement and maritime agencies.

The course is designed for Port Facility Security Officers, Company Security Officers, Ship Security Officers, crew with security duties, Port State Control Officers, maritime executives, and other appropriate crew members, port personnel, and maritime security organization members. The curriculum adopts and illustrates the approach taken by the ISPS Code that ensuring the security of ships and port facilities is a risk management activity, and an assessment of the risks must be made in each particular case to determine what security measures are appropriate. It is based on the same maritime security training provided at the IMO's World Maritime University in Malmo, Sweden, as well as the U.S. Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.

Maritime Security

Emergency Film Group is offering an important new series about a critical and timely subject - vessel and port security. The International Maritime Organization's (IMO) International Ship and Port Facility Security Code (ISPS) and the U.S. Maritime Port Security Act of 2002 (MTSA) require training for port and vessel security personnel. These 11 programs are a series of classroom presentations by Kim Peterson, a noted maritime security authority. As such, the programs are quite different from the usual Emergency Film Group production, although the information is equally authoritative and accurate. The series was produced by Moxie Media and Sea Secure.

Emergency Film Group also offers an awareness level training program, "Maritime Security: Keeping Ports Safe."

About maritime training requirements

The ISPS Code, which takes effect in July, 2004, as well as the MTSA require Federal agencies, ports, and vessel owners to take numerous steps to upgrade security and to address anti-terrorism and anti-piracy procedures. Also required is specialized maritime security training for port facility and vessel personnel. Non-compliance with ISPS and MTSA requirements can result in ships being refused issue of the required International Ship Security Certificate, thereby jeopardizing future visits by ships. And without proper training of their personnel, both ships and ports face increased liability in the event of

Maritime Security: Keeping Ports Safe

Maritime Security: Keeping Ports Safe is a video-based program offering Awareness, Prevention and Response training for dockside and shipside workers and managers, security and port operations personnel, police and fire officials, contractors, and others who may work at or near port facilities. The program examines the major security issues faced by the maritime industry including petty thievery, grand larceny, smuggling of illegal goods and people, and the growing threat of terrorism. It also outlines common sense policies that both security and non-security employees can use on a daily basis to help keep ports secure.

Included with the purchase is a Model Procedures Guide that helps facilities and vessels conduct security assessments and set up security plans for the three MARSEC threat levels.
